

55 ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

 A catheter for retrograde orientation in a blood flow is used to determine the blood flow rate by thermodilution measurements. The determination of the blood flow rate accommodates injectate induced thermal influences on a dilution thermal sensor, wherein the thermal influences can 60 occur prior to introduction of the injectate into the blood flow.